Our Mission: Joining together to raise every child's complete wellbeing.

Our Vision: Supportive communities where every family can raise children who thrive as they live, learn, and play.

Our Core Values:

Children and Families First: We honor and value children, youth, and families as experts in their own lives, and promote success in all areas of wellbeing.

Racial and Social Justice: We work collectively to promote racial and social justice by addressing barriers to success, and ensuring inclusion of all people.

Transformation with an Engaged Presence: It is our duty to participate with cultural humility, always learning, reflecting, and applying new understandings to strengthen the systems and communities that health, learning, and growth depend upon.

Partnerships Are Essential: We team with community partners, shoulder to shoulder, to develop and deliver measurably effective solutions to serve children, families, and providers.

Interdependence of Research and Practice: We believe that taking action informed from lived experience, research and practice achieves outcomes that children, youth, families, and communities desire similarly.

Ethical and Responsible Use of Resources: We are good caretakers of resources and relationships that benefit children, including the ethical use of data.

Long to Learn is an educational and consulting organization dedicated to making conversations about puberty easier, earlier, and more supportive for children and the adults who care for them. We work with children, families, schools, and community organizations to reshape how puberty is talked about, taught, and understood.

Our approach centers on care, inclusion, and awareness of the diverse ways children experience growth and change. We provide educational workshops for children and/or parents, professional development, organizational consultation, and family support that help adults and their children feel prepared for the ways that young people transition through physical, emotional, and social changes in developmentally appropriate ways.

Long to Learn places a strong emphasis on accessibility and disability inclusion, recognizing that children with disabilities experience the same pubertal changes as their peers and deserve education that meets their unique needs. By integrating mental health awareness and supportive practices, we aim to reduce confusion, shame, and distress that children may experience during puberty while promoting confidence, dignity, and understanding for every child.

Mary Cariola Center

Website: www.marycariola.org Phone: 585-271-0761 Email: info@marycariola.org

The Mary Cariola Center educates and cares for children, youth and young adults with intellectual developmental disabilities and complex medical challenges. Since 1949, our independent, non-profit agency has served the community with the delivery of innovative services that assist our students and residents reach milestone once thought impossible.

Cariola's school program educates students ages 3-22 through an interprofessional approach that benefits the students and their families. Social workers, teachers, therapists and clinicians work together with each student in order to empower their potential, and as our founder believed, "every child has potential regardless of disability." Cariola staff work with over 450 students on three different school campuses and serve over 52 school districts in an 11 county region.

The community services or residential program is where over 40 individuals call home. Six houses throughout Monroe County including those with behavioral issues as well as medical complexities. The goal of each staff member in the houses is to assist residents to not only enjoy, but participate in their neighborhoods and community while learning life skills and personal growth.
